

WHO SAYS HISTORY WON'T REPEAT?

No Nukes

Keep receiving such positive feedback on the first crop of Red River Hanover that dare we dream it's almost reminiscent of the early hoopla focused on the first crop of No Nukes, who like his paternal grandson Red River, was very much a horse of unfulfilled destiny showing superstar speed on occasion, but lacking the consistency to rank on a par with the elites of his era. So can be cited for Red River Hanover, who at times demonstrated as much brilliance as any colt who ever lived, but like his Nuclear grandfather did leave something to be desired in the consistency department.

Red River Hanover

Now here's the kicker. Few expected the siring brilliance that ensued from No Nukes, but as the first crop prowess became apparent, the premonition of what was to come no longer seemed that far fetched. In retrospect, it's actually quite understandable. Conversely, similar reports about the first crop of Red River Hanover are literally pouring in from everywhere.
